it is reasonable to expect that a musician shall be at least an accurate and legible writer as well as a reader of the language of his art the immense increase in the amount of music published and its cheapness seem rather to have increased than decreased this necessity for they have vastly multiplied activity in the art if they have not intensified the necessity for music writing they have increased the number of those by whom the necessity is felt intelligent knowledge of notation is the more necessary inasmuch as music writing is in only a comparatively few cases mere copying even when writing from a copy some alteration is frequently necessary as will be shown in the following pages requiring independent knowledge of the subject on the part of the copyist yet many musicians thoroughly competent as performers cannot write a measure of music without bringing a smile to the lips of the initiated many performers will play or sing a note at sight without hesitation which asked to write they will first falter over and then bungle at least by writing it at the wrong octave the admirable working of theoretical examination papers is sometimes in ridiculous contrast with the puerility of the writing psychologists would probably say that this was because conceptual action is a higher mental function than perceptual in other words that recollection is harder than recognition the remedy is simple recognition must be developed till it becomes recollection the writing of music must be taught concurrently with the reading of it
